

Raylyn Norwood, rsnorwood@uncg.edu

FAHE Scholarship

11/30/2023

Making decisions in life is crucial for professional success. As for me, the public health field is the perfect place for me. This essay examines the factors that persuaded me to apply for the Dr. Becky J. Smith Scholarship from the Foundation for the Advancement of Health Education.

To date, obtaining a Bachelor of Science in Public Health degree in May 2024 represents my most noteworthy accomplishment. Thanks to this program, I am better prepared for future work in healthcare facilities and implementation progress. It also provides several other options, like further pursuing my public health studies. My study has enhanced my ability to learn, which will help me in my future pursuit of lifelong learning. Classes and university settings have allowed me to find new ways to improve my life by learning things that will help me in my future job. I can apply my newfound expertise, knowledge, and abilities to my work environment. Various factors, including culturally, gender-relevant, racially relevant, and ethnically appropriate public health practice, are also promoted by my Bachelor of Science in Public Health degree.

My goal in becoming a public health advocate and provider is to inspire and help communities worldwide by providing health education and giving back. I believe that individuals can only effect conscious change in society's health and healthcare policies and better understand how similar all people are, regardless of their gender, race, or culture, through equitable policies, interventions, and education. By helping me pay for a college education that will provide me with the foundation of knowledge and thinking I need to continue in the public health field, this scholarship will enable me to take the first step toward my dreams.